

INDICE

Foreword	xv
Acknowledgments	xvii
Abbreviations and acronyms	xix
Executive summary	xxi
Designing the overall policy framework	xxvii
Getting resources to schools, communities and households	xxxviii
Taking advantage of decentralization to get results	xlvi
Conclusion	xlviii
1. Demography, economy, and government finance	1
Demographic and social conditions	2
Economic conditions	9
Pattern of government finance	11
Conclusion	20
2. Enrollments and patterns of student flow
Structure of the education systems	23
Overview of enrollments trends	25
Enrollments in government and nongovernment establishments	28
Evening classes, distance education, and nonformal basic education	30
Trends and levels in the gross enrollments ratio	36
Students flow in primary and secondary education	40
Issues for policy development	55
Conclusion	59
3. Education expenditures	61
Overall pattern of recurrent public spending on education	62
A closer look at recurrent public spending on education in 2001-02	70
Public spending per student by level and type of education	82
Household spending on education	97
Issues for policy development	100
Conclusion	111
4. Disparities in enrollments, student flow, and benefit incidence	113
Overview of participation rates	114
Disparities in student flow patterns in primary education	119
Distribution of public spending on education	126
Issues for policy development	130
Conclusions	136
5. Service delivery in primary and secondary education
Overview of the network of schools	139
Selected characteristics of schools	145
Staffing patterns	147
Teacher allocation across Government schools	154
Economies of scale in service delivery	158
Student achievement	163
Issues for policy development	172
Conclusion	180
6. Aspects of the market and nonmarket benefits of schooling	181
Employment patterns and workers' educational attainment	182
The market returns to education	185

