

INDICE

Abstract	v
Acknowledgements	vii
1. Introduction
Income transfer versus insurance functions	1
Indexing as a social protection instrument
Study purpose and structure	2
2. Index-Based insurance in low-income contexts: potential and limitations	3
Why insurance is important
Reasons for understanding of insurance
Weather-index based insurance	4
Implications for public intervention	7
3. Recent global innovations
Mongolia index-based livestock insurance	9
Mexico FONDEN and FAPRACC	10
India: supporting commercially provided weather indexed insurance	12
4. Forays into insurance in Africa
Ethiopia WFP and international drought insurance	15
Malawi: using rainfall data for both localized crop specific insurance and for a national index of Maize	17
Kenya Arid lands livestock	20
Programs in the planning stage: Madagascar and Tanzania	21
5. Future directions and conclusion
Public investment and weather-indexed insurance market failures	23
Improving the information base in African countries	24
Applying weather-indexing to social protections programs	25
Potential role of the world bank in insurance-based social protection	27
Appendix	31
Bibliography	33